5 INTRODUCTION
Ian Hartshorne

9 INSTITUTIONS
Magnus Quaife

10 Condensed Knowledge
Daniel Sturgis

17 Teaching Painting at Edinburgh College of Art:
An Awkward Period of Self-Reflection and Identity Crisis, a Work in Progress
Gordon Brennan

23 On Painting: The Discipline, Interdisciplinarity and Indisciplinarity
Professor Alistair Payne

31 APPROACHES
Magnus Quaife

32 Against Production
John McClennagh

37 Teaching Painting as Research:
Curriculum Strategy Post-Analogue
Ian Gonczarow

45 Teaching Painting in the Expanded Field:
Positioning, Pedagogy and Practice
Dr Craig Staff

51 CHALLENGING PRECONCEPTIONS
Donal Moloney

52 Dirty Practice: A Painting Workshop and the Hidden Curriculum
Maggie Ayliffe and Dr Christian Mieves

58 "10 + EXTEND": How Can We Teach Painting to Students Who Already Think They Know What Painting Is?
Sarah Horton and Sarah Longworth-West

64 Teaching Painting Through Not Teaching Painting
Sean Kaye

71 CONTEXTS
Donal Moloney

72 Aspirational Beauty: Painting Class... the Importance of Personal Narrative in Painting
Sarah Taylor

78 Step Away from the Screen, Please: Or, the Painting Student on the Road to Tarascon
Dougal McKenzie

83 A Reconsideration of Painting as a Material-Based Practice Within Contemporary Art and the Value of Skills, Techniques and Materials in Teaching Painting
Stuart Mackenzie and Joseph Mark Wright

89 From Being Nobody to Be Called Somebody and Finding Oneself as Everybody: Looking at Art Pedagogies in the Past and Present
Joana Erkkilä

93 PAINT QUALITY: THE CRITICAL ELEMENT OF
PAINTING MATERIALS WITHIN FINE ART PRACTICE
Pip Seymour and Rebecca Wallace

94 Contributor Biographies

95 Acknowledgements
The ways in which painting is taught within art schools and academies has undergone several significant changes in recent years. As the barriers between media have eroded into more fluid borders, art schools have responded by adapting and evolving. Many painting departments have been absorbed into general fine art courses, but specialist painting courses and pathways still continue to be developed. How have these courses defined and redefined themselves to reflect the current artistic landscape, and how can painting maintain an identity within non-specialist approaches?

Teaching Painting addresses the historical, theoretical, pedagogical and continually shifting methods by which the medium is taught. It asks how and why approaches to teaching painting have changed and developed, and offers a platform through which practices and experience can be shared.

The book includes introductions from Ian Hartshorne, Magnus Quaife and Donal Moloney, and contributions from Maggie Ayliffe and Dr Christian Mieves, Gordon Brennan, Jaana Erkkilä, Ian Gonczarow, Sarah Horton and Sarah Longworth-West, Sean Kaye, John McClenaghan, Dougal McKenzie, Professor Alistair Payne, Dr Craig Staff, Daniel Sturgis, Sarah Taylor, Joseph Mark Wright and Stuart MacKenzie.